Toro's Annual WaterSmart Symposium to take place July 19, 2007

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (June 22, 2007) – In celebration of the Irrigation Association's Smart Irrigation Month, Toro has announced that its second annual WaterSmart Symposium will take place July 19 at the company's state-of-the-art irrigation development and testing facility in Riverside, Calif. Landscape contractors, golf course superintendents, architects, specifiers, homebuilders, government officials, and others with a stake in water conservation and the future of irrigation are encouraged to attend.

"We are very excited to host the second annual WaterSmart Symposium," said Phil Burkart, vice president and general manager of Toro's Irrigation Division. "This is part of our ongoing effort to educate the industry about the importance of proper water management and position Toro as the leading provider of water-efficient irrigation solutions. With last year's event filled to capacity, we anticipate another successful event."

This event will feature presentations from some of the industry's leading experts and other professionals who have already implemented successful water-saving techniques and programs. The WaterSmart Symposium will cover timely issues related to water management in the irrigation industry.

"The symposium will serve as a great opportunity to address water conservation and the issues facing the irrigation industry today," said Burkart. "Through this event, we can help lead the way in overcoming these challenges and implementing practical water-saving solutions. Attendees will also get a glimpse of how Toro's full-line of WaterSmart products can help keep landscapes and golf courses beautiful while helping conserve our water resources."
